

Refugee Myths & Facts

Photo: Camille Nuttall

Rnita Dacho

Who is a refugee?

'Refugee' is used commonly to refer to people who are forced to leave their homes for many reasons, including conflict and violence. Sometimes it is used to also refer to a person displaced due to a natural disaster or environmental change.

How many are there? Who are they? Where do they go?

Photo: ©UNHCR/L. Addario

As at the end of 2017, there were 68.5 million people who had been forcibly displaced from their home. Of these, around 50 million were displaced within their own country (internally displaced), while 25.4 million are refugees

The top five countries of origin make up 68% of refugees worldwide:

- Syria, with 6.3 million
- Afghanistan, with 2.6 million
- South Sudan, with 2.4 million
- Myanmar, with 1.2 million
- Somalia, with 986,400

Distressingly, children make up an astonishing 52% of the world's refugees in 2017.

People flee overwhelming to neighbouring countries. Turkey, Pakistan, Lebanon, and Iran (the top four) are close to major countries of origin.

The country with the largest proportionate number of refugees is Lebanon, followed by Nauru. Australia is 57th on the list.

The largest number of refugees compared to Gross Domestic Product (GDP) are mostly in Africa. Australia is 94th on that list.

How do they come to Australia?

The Minister for Immigration sets the number of people that Australia will take in and determines the priorities for deciding who will be accepted. In recent years, the number was set at 13,750 places, but this has gradually increased since 2015-16 to 18,750 places in 2018-19.

Myth:
Most people seeking asylum arrive by boat.

Fact:
Most people seeking asylum arrive by air.

Resettling refugees

For many decades, Australia has been a leader in bringing some of the most vulnerable refugees in the world from overseas, and supporting them to settle in Australia. Australia's contribution is important, as relatively few countries resettle refugees. This commitment is even more valuable today when it is harder than ever for refugees to find protection in a safe country.

Photo: Dawood Faiz

Muzafar Ali

Myth:
It is illegal to be an asylum seeker.

Fact:
Everyone has the right to seek asylum if your life or freedom is threatened.

Why do people seek asylum rather than be resettled?

While Australia's resettlement program is world-class, Australia's treatment of refugees who come to Australia seeking protection is now leading the world in the opposite direction – to the most punitive policies aimed to deter vulnerable people from seeking safety.

There is no 'queue' for people to join. Instead, the 'normal' way for refugees to find protection across the world is to cross a border and claim protection as a refugee. This is commonly called 'seeking asylum'.

Are people seeking asylum 'queue jumpers'?

This way of seeking protection is protected under the Refugee Convention (the main international treaty protecting refugees). While governments can choose to resettle refugees, if they sign the Refugee Convention they are obliged to consider the claims of refugees who arrive in their territory.

Myth: People seeking asylum are queue jumpers.

Fact: There is no orderly queue.

Are people who seek asylum by boat illegal?

Photo: Barat Ali Batoor

While Australia's asylum policies are focused on people arriving by boat, other people seek asylum after entering Australia by plane with a visa

(for example, as a tourist or student). Often, people coming by boat are accused of not being 'genuine' refugees, even though historically over 80% of them have been found to be refugees.

Myth: Refugees are a threat to national security.

Fact: Refugees are the survivors of violence and terror.

Fleeing danger is messy. If you are being persecuted, it is very risky even to try to get a passport from your government or a visa to another country. Countries in general do not allow someone to apply for a visa because they are a refugee and need protection. In some countries, you still need an 'exit visa' – permission to leave the country. If you are fleeing war or conflict, you don't generally have time to research, plan and apply for a visa.

How does Australia treat people seeking asylum?

Australia is stopping people seeking asylum from coming (by boat or plane). If any do come by boat, they are sent to Nauru or Papua New Guinea to be 'processed' for years, and are being left to languish there with little prospect of living safely and supporting themselves.

Those who enter Australia without prior notice are, by law, required to be detained. There is no time limit to their detention and no independent review of whether they should be detained. People are held despite committing no crime. Those now in administrative detention have been there on average for more than a year, with some detained now for nine years.

Myth: Boat arrivals are fakers and are not real refugees.

Fact: Between 70-90% of boat arrivals have been found to be refugees.

In recent years, most people seeking asylum have been released into the community. While this is very welcome, their difficulties do not stop there. Many of them are forced into destitution, because they are not given enough (or, most recently, anything) to live on. They were barred from working for years, and have not received any real help to settle in Australia by the government. They are forced to live like this for years, as it takes the government years to process their claims.

Habiburahman

Photo: Habiburahman

Even when they are found to be refugees, the punishment continues. Under current policy, refugees who come by boat are forced to live on temporary protection visas forever, meaning they must apply every three or five years to stay in Australia. They cannot be reunited with family, or even visit them without the permission of the government.

Sydney Office

Suite 4A6, 410 Elizabeth Street,
Surry Hills NSW 2010
Ph: (02) 9211 9333
Email: admin@refugeecouncil.org.au

Melbourne Office

601/580 Collins St
Melbourne VIC 3000
Ph: (03) 9600 3302
Twitter: @OzRefugeeCounc

Refugee Council of Australia

www.refugeecouncil.org.au